WM. B. JOHNSON PASSES AWAY

William Benjamin Johnson, for 24 of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, Mass., passed away Monday at his home, 489 Washington street, Liverpool. Brookline, Mass. He resigned his position as Director and clerk of The Mother Church in June, 1909, and since then had been a Christian Science practitioner.

Mr. Johnson was born in Coventry Eng., Nov. 12, 1839, and at the age of 4 came to America. He settled in Roxbury, attended the public schools of that district and later learned one of the mechanical trades. In 1861 at the call for volunteers by Abraham Lincoln, Mr. Johnson enlisted in the first Massachusetts regiment and served for three years in the army of the

Some years later he was healed in Christian Science of a trouble from which the regular medical schools had given no permanent relief. In 1884 Mr. Johnson studied with Mrs. Eddy and at once became one of her trusted and esteemed workers. He held the position of secretary of the Massachusetts Metaphysical College Association and was also eretary of the National Christian Science Association.

In 1887 he was elected clerk of The Mother Church and in 1889 was elected a Director of The First Church of Christ Scientist, in Boston. In these capacities he gained an international acquaintanceship with Christian Scientists and his kindly services endeared him to many. In June, 1909, Mr. Johnson resigned his offices in The Mother Church and became a Christian Science practitioner. He is survived by one son, William Lyman Johnson. The interment will be private Thursday morning.

On Nov. 10, it was announced power, and this friction threatened during one of Mr. Gladstone's premierships introduced by him. On this occasion an accommodation was reached by a conference of the two houses.

Lords One Sided

The contention of the Liberals has always been that, owing to the composition of the House of Lords, the Conservative party has been in power, whether defeated at the polls or not. That is to say that a Conservative prime minister could be sure of getting his measures through the House of Lords, and equally sure of being able to cause those of his opponents to be rejected. It is this fact, now so generally admitted, that induced the Lords themselves to agree to a reform of the upper cham-

On being sent to the Lords, t was so amended that the government the following effect: refused to accept the Lords amend-House of Commons, with a majority of over 300. The Lords nevertheless insisted on their amendments and the bill was subsequently discharged.

Resolution Now Famous

The loss of these measures led to the introduction of Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman's famous resolution, which read

"That, in order to give effect to the will of the people as expressed by their elected representatives, it is necessary that the power of the other House to alter or reject bills passed by this House should be so restricted by law as to secure that within the limits of a single Parliament the final decision of the Commons shall prevail."

Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman ex plained how the resolution would operate. He outlined a scheme which provided for conferences being held between members appointed in equal numbers by the two Houses in cases where agree- als which would destroy the usefulness ment was found to be impossible. The general attendance was poor, only four spectaters in the grand-stand, and society row between the two fields had but indifferent patronage.

The first event on the card was for the army and navy cups, between the Myopia Freebooters—Q. A. Shaw, E. D. Morgan, Jr., H. P. McKean and F. H. Prince, who won by a score of 13 to 41/2 over the Philadelphia Freebooters-A. J. Drexel, Paul H. Tweed, C. R. Snowden and Philip Boyer. ## COWES REGATTA FOR THE SEASON OF 1911 OPENS BRILLIANTLY

Yachts From Many Countries Are Competing in Many of the 'Races of England's Classic Events

METEOR WINS ONE

COWES, Isle of Wight-The Cowes yachting season opened Monday in perfect weather and under brilliant auspices. The British royal family was present on board the royal yacht Victoria and Albert, but his majesty is not taking part in the races with his famous yacht Britannia. King Alfonso of Spain, who also is present with Queen Victoria, on the other hand, is taking a prominent part in the yachting events with his yacht Hispania.

This year the races have taken on a more international nature. Besides Great Britain and Spain the other countries represented in the regatta are Germany, by Emperor William's Meteor, and France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Austria. Many Americans are attending the regatta, but there are fewer American yachts than

The Meteor, owned by Emperor William of Germany, took the big class race Monday, beating the Water Witch, the White Heather and the Germania in the order named. Special interest attached to this race because it was the first appearance of the English boat Water Witch, specially built by G. Cecil Whitaker. The White Heather is an English boat and the Germania is owned by Lieut. Krupp von Bohlen und Hal-

The German yacht Sophie Elizabeth, owned by Leopold O. H. Bierman of Bremen, won the commodore's interchallenge cup valued at $1250 and open to 15-footers. King Alfonso's Hispania was second. The Spanish monarch was on board the yacht during the race.

"I haven't words at my command to express the depths of my appreciation, which I have, not only for the character of the work which they have done, but for the amount of it. Their labors have been prodigious and the association owes to Herbert Houston, the chairman of this committee, a debt it can never repay, and to Romer and French and Ingersoll and Pratt and all others. ### ORGAN-BUILDER AND PLAYER MEET

Convention at Ocean Grove, N. J., Brings Constructive and Interpretive Musical Geniuses Into Some Hours of Argument

AYS the builder of church organs, Ernest M. Skinner, on the question of organ playing: "You may sum up the whole situation in the one point that the instrument has outgrown the performer."

Mr. Skinner goes to Ocean Grove, N. J., today to take part in the fourth anqual convention of the National Association of Organists, which is held in the Ocean Grove auditorium from Aug. 1 to 10. He will speak Wednesday morning at a conference with organ builders, and he will discuss the question of standardlzing the console, that movable piece of furniture electrically or pneumatically attached to the modern organ, containing the devices of keyboard, pedals, pulls, buttons and tilting tablets by which the player operates the pipes in their manifold combinations.

Progress Cause of Divergence

"The organ," says Mr. Skinner, "is a new instrument in spite of its antiquity. Modern methods have revolutionized the instrument of 20 years ago. Electropneumatics, raised air pressures, enormous speed in action and imitative orchestral effects have developed the organ so fast that it has outgrown the

As Mr. Skinner explains it, each builder in keeping up with the developments of his craft has used his own sys tem of assembling the elements of organ control under the hands of the player; each maker, in other words, has made console which he thought best suited the convenience of the organist. The result is that a performer sitting down to an unfamiliar instrument has to labor long to master its mechanism. One day's practise is not enough to make the player know the position of the stops so he can work them automatically. As a consequence, the playing of many resital artists shows faulty rhythm and ill-chosen combinations of tone.

Bach Still Unknown

Ask Mr. Skinner what are the possi bilities of the organ as an instrument for popularizing music and he repeats: The organ has outgrown the player. Imagine a vaudeville actor trying to interpret Shakespeare and you have a picture of the average organist who attempts to play compositions of John Sebastian Bach. Bach is only begun when you have him on your fingers. His music has to be developed and colored. A great artist is needed to do him justice. The reason why he is not liked by the public is because he is so badly We assume that dignity and dulness are the same thing. ## HE HOUSEHOLD

Pale blue, trimmed with white lace

DONGEE is much used for little girls' I dresses this season. This one is pale blue and is trimmed with white lace of a heavy sort. It is dainty in coloring, and the dress is a simple one, easily

The blouse is all in one piece and the skirt is straight and gathered at the upper edge. The two are joined by means of a belt. There are the fewest possible seams to be sewed up, yet the effect is one of extreme smartness.

For the dressy frock nothing prettier than pongee could be devised, but the same model will be found a good one for lawn and batiste, for the still simpler ginghams and the like. Bordered materials are being extensively used, and, as the skirt is straight, it lends itself to such with exceptional success. The border can be cut off and used as trimming on the blouse

In the back view the dress is shown made of plain material trimmed with striped, and the effect is a pretty one for every-day occasions.

For the 10-year size will be required 4 yards of material 27 inches wide, 31/4 yards 36 or 21/2 yards 44 with 3 yards of banding and % yard 18 inches wide for the yoke.

A pattern (6964) in sizes for girls 8 10 and 12 years of age, can be had at any May Manton agency or will be sent Address 132 East Twenty-third street, New York, or Masonic Temple,

The store did not pretend to cater to a high class of trade. It was after the lower middle-class customers who were willing to do without frills and fancy things so long as they got their money's worth. The trouble was that this atmosphere had crept throughout the entire shop among the salesgy Customers were waited on in a halfhearted, take-it-or-leave-it manner. The day the college, girl began work there, the first thing that struck her was the indifference shown by her mates.

"To save me I could not see why this should be the case here any more than in the fashionable stores uptown," she said in telling of her experience. "I knew how I wanted to be waited on when I shopped, and I could see no reason why the customers in this store should not be treated in the same way.

"I did the best I knew how. If I happened to be sitting down when I saw a customer coming toward the ribbon counter, I would arise promptly. In showing goods I did not act as if I were going through a formality. I tried to give the impression that I enjoyed my work. I would unroll ribbons and hold them up to the light or against a shirt waist to show color effect.

TRIED RECIPES

GRAPE PRESERVES THE best grapes to use for preserving are those which are but two thirds ripe. First pulp one half gallon of stemmed grapes and peel and core two large apples, which should be sliced thin. Place grape pulp and apples in a kettle with little water and cook until they can be rubbed up smooth and run through a colander to remove the seeds. Take one pint of sugar to one pint of cooked pulps and boil until it begins to jell; then add the skins. #### WATER GARDEN

We bought an abandoned farmhouse or a summer home, writes a contributor to Good Housekeeping. Water was piped into the kitchen sink from a spring above the house, but the sink spout was an unsolved problem. "Let's turn it into a water-garden," was the proposal of one bright member of the family. So we sought in meadows and swamps for plants that like wet soil, and we planted blue and yellow iris, or "flags" as the country people call them, tall meadow ue, cat-o'-nine tails, and ferns along the banks of our "brook." This year that is a thing of beauty. grow luxuriantly and absorb the odors or prevent their forming. We would not hange it if we could. As the "water system" is our own, with no meter to consider, we can leave the faucet open all the time, which keeps the channel clear and clean and the plants flourishing.

SAGGING SKIRTS

Summer dress skirts when made of thin material will always sag after they are hemmed and finished if care is not taken to prevent it. A good way to do is to have the skirt sagged first, behe refused to give them. They got them fore it is turned up to be hemmed, says the New York Press.

Monitor Advertising Conclusive

Effectiveness of advertising is based on confidence, which in the case of a newspaper is built up in the mind of the reader only by adherence to a welldefined policy of excluding the misleading, exaggerated and even false statements which some advertisers still feel are necessary to use to attract attention.

The Monitor feels that articles advertised in its columns may be expected to fulfil the statements made of them. Its position is well understood by its advertisers and by its readers. This unity of understanding results in Monitor advertising being conclusive. If the article is one that is needed by discriminating people in homes of comfort it will sell if advertised in the Monitor.

This has been demonstrated very frequently, so frequently, in fact, that we affirm with confidence that any advertisement fulfilling the ordinary demands of seasonableness and utility, which will be acceptable to the Monitor will also be accepted by its readers

Many national advertisers have found that the character and wide distribution of the Monitor's public responds actively to Monitor advertisers. Have YOU?

The Ethics

Advertising

There are no ethics in advertising which are not present in any other legitimate business. Conversely, there should be all the ethics in advertising which should characterize any other reputable business.

- Illegitimate, disreputable business should not be allowed to exist anywhere, in any form when operated by any one for any purpose. Hence illegitimate advertising should not exist. Reduced to its logical conclusion, this is all there is to be said upon the ethics of advertising. Advertising is
- either right or wrong. If right it needs no discussion. If wrong it should not be permitted.
- In advertising problems three classes of people are affected—the advertiser, the publisher and the reader. The ethics of advertising are binding on the advertiser and the publisher. What are they?
- The advertiser's standpoint is clear and his consideration of the ethics of advertising is strictly a personal one. It is decidedly wrong to steal, to lie or to secure money under false pretenses.
- To do these things in an oral business transaction puts a man beyond the pale. To do the same things through the medium of the printed word does not modify their character and should put him beyond the pale just the same.

The publisher's relation to the ethics of advertising is also a personal one. If a man benefits by being the medium of communicating a lie, by assisting in the commission of a theft, or by being the means of defrauding a man by circulating fraudulent statements, he is placed among the undesirables in the business world. If he does these things in his newspaper he is just as culpable. The form the act takes does not modify the morals or ethics of the deed.

Therefore: How can a newspaper deliberately publish for profit advertisements of a debasing, destructive, dishonest character?

The Christian Science Monitor Cannot!

UNITED STATES WEATHER BUREAU PREDICTIONS FOR BOSTON AND VI-CINITY: Fair tonight and Wednesday, probably followed by showers; moderate easterly and southerly winds.

An area of low pressure extends from Texas northeastward to upper Michigan. It has caused showers during the last twenty-four hours from the gulf northeastward to the lake region. The greatest amount reported was 1.44 inches from New Orleans, La. This area is producing warm, muggy weather in all districts east of the Misaß-sippl river. It will continue to drift eastward and the showers will probably reach this vicinity late tonight or Wednesday. This disturbance is followed by an area of high pressure, with lower temperatures, that is now moving in from the Northwest.

LARGE WORKING BALANCE OF THE U. S. TREASURY

Department Not Likely to Increase Its Funds With Depositary Banks, According to One Authority

NEW YORK-The National City Bank in its August circular says: The fact that the treasury now, has a large working balance as the result of recent sales of Panama bonds and payment of corporation taxes, has given the impression that the department will increase its balances with depositary banks. With roundly $90,000,000 in treasury vaults, the government is in a position to make a distribution of funds; but there is no intention of doing so at this time. It is not believed either that there will be any necessity during the fall months for coming to re lief of the money market. In recent years banks have shown ability to get along fairly well during the fall move ment of currency without treasury aid, and indications are that they will be able to do so this autumn.

In determining to hold in its own offices the cash it now has, the department has been guided by two considerationsfirst, that money conditions do not warrant a distribution of funds, and second, it would be unwise to part with cash now, whereas later on it is possible a real occasion might arise justifying a ditribution. Besides at present receipts and expenditures are not making a fa vorable showing. Deficiency for July is about $8,000,000 larger than for the same month a year ago. This is largely accounted for, however, by the fact that most of the corporation taxes were paid 118 1/2 just before the close of the last fiscal year, which ended June 30. August will also show a deficiency and probably September. All this means that the government is now paying out more than it receives and by just so much as this is done the treasury contributes in a way to easy money conditions, and so negatives the idea of a further dis-

As was to have been expected, banks having 2 per cent bonds lodged at the treasury as security for public funds have to some extent been substituting in very considerable amount have been transferred to circulation accounts. There yet remains a little over $20,000, 000 of the 2s held as security for public deposits, and gradually these are likely to be withdrawn as the 3s are used to displace them while a corresponding in crease in national bank circulation may be expected. It is unfortunate of course that there should be any increase in national bank circulation at this time the amount of outstanding notes already

STANDING OF THE CLEARING HOUSE BANKS OF BOSTON

Average Legal Reserve Slightly Higher Than Last Week and Average Actual Reserve Somewhat Lower

The individual reserve standing of local national banks, members of the Boston clearing house, at present and a week ago, is presented in the table given below. In addition to the legal solution reserve carried here and in New York (one half may stand in the form of deposits with the New York correspondent banks), we compute what may be called actual reserve at present, as indicated by the excess reserve in New York rethe excess reserve in New York. The serve agents over the amount which may be counted as half of legal reserve is here counted part of reserve instead of simply an offset to deposit liabilities, as is done in figuring legal reserves. The excess or actual reserve over 25 per cent denotes the amount which might be deducted from the total reserves in both cities, Boston and New York, and still leave the legal reserve intact. No reserve is computed against government deposits. The table follows:

BLOCKING OF THE CALUMET MERGER

LANSING-In granting a temporar; njunction to Charles M. Turner and other minority stockholders of the Osceola Mining Company to prevent the onsolidating with the nine other copper mining companies of Michigan, Judge Wiest of the Ingham circuit court holds that the state statutes relative to conolidations is a bar to the completion of the organization in its proposed form. Other points he deems too important to be decided without a full hearing and the examination of witnesses. The court says that if the law which *1,106,210 limits the amount of capital such mergers to $10,000,000, allows the imits the amount of capital stock of *1,535,461 proposed merger to be completed with *1,385,245 *10,000,000 capital stock and $82,000,000 in capital, then the act simply operates, to save the corporation from paying a

BRITISH DESTROYER IS FITTED WITH OIL ENGINES FOR TESTS

LONDON-The announcement made some time ago that passenger vessels and cargo boats fitted with internal combustion gave rise to considerable correspondon the subject in the daily papers, and many were the opinions for or against this innovation expressed by competent engineers.

A great number, perhaps the majority of those who referred to the subject, declared that the internal combustion engine was not yet sufficiently reliable to be used for the purpose. In view of what has been said on the subject, the recent announcement made that the wellknown firm of Messrs. John I. Thorney croft are constructing a destroyer fitted with two independent sets of engines one internal combustion, the other tur-bines, is of considerable interest.

It is announced that the vessel is being constructed to the order of the British admiralty for the purpose of carrying out exhaustive experiments with regard to the possibility of using in ternal combustion engines for battleships. In the destroyer referred to, the oil engines will, it is understood, be employed when the vessel is cruising at a speed of about 15 knots, the Diesel oil engines being used for the purpose When, on the other hand, high speeds are required, the turbines will be employed. Outwardly the vessel will not differ in appearance from the destroyer with which the public is so familiar, since the use of the funnels will be necessitated for the turbines. It is understood that the engine to be employed will be a two-cycle combustion engine feed of the Diesel type, but the exact combination of turbines and oil engines that will be employed is not yet known.

In any case it is clear that there will be a considerable saving of fuel, and in the number of hands required in the engine room. The fuel will also be much cheaper and can be taken on board with far greater rapidity than is the case with The result of the experiment will be awaited with the greatest interest for whether in the construction of field by all connected with, or interested in, marine engineering.

KING HAS BODYGUARD OF ROYAL ARCHERS WHILE IN SCOTLAND

EDINBURGH-The inspection by the King of the royal company of archers in the gardens of Holyrood Palace was a ceremony entirely in keeping with the traditions and associations of the place. This ancient and honorable co among whose privates are to be found many Scottish dukes and noblemen, has long been privileged to act as the bodyguard of the sovereign in Scotland.

Sir Walter Scott says of the Scottish archers: "Each of them ranked as gentleman in place of honor: and their near approach to the King's person gave them dignity in their own eyes as well as importance in those of the nation.'

The present company is commanded by the Duke of Buccleuch; it has four captains, Lord Wemyss, Lord Rosebery Lord Haddington and Lord Home; four lieutenants, Lord Elgin, Lord Balfour Lord Polworth, and Lord Aberdeen: four ensigns, Lord Tweeddale, Sir J. H. A. Macdonald, Lord Dalkeith, and the Duke of Abercorn, and 12 brigadiers, many of whom are noblemen.

The latest officer to be appointed was the Duke of Roxburghe who until re cently had been merely a private. About 60 of the archers were on duty at the palace, the rest of the company, headed by the pipers and band of the royal Scots, marched from Princes street to Holyrood, where they formed up in double line, facing the palace.

· The uniform worn by the archers i of dark green with a broad Balmoral bonnet adorned with an eagle's feather. Each archer carried a bow, and three arrows in his belt, and each private wore a short sword. On the arrival of the royal party, the archers gave a royal salute, holding their bows in the left hand with the arm fully extended.

The King then inspected the line by walking down the ranks, after which his majesty presented new colors to take the place of those given by King William IV., which had done duty for four regimes. His majesty spoke a few words PESHAWAR - Subscriptions to the to his bodyguard expressing his pleasure proposed Islamic college, which is to be at seeing them, and assuring them of his interest in their welfare.

The royal party then returned to the palace, where the ancient ceremon, known as the "Reddends" was carried out in the theater room. The term "Reddends" in Scottish law refers to the clause in a charter specifying a service When one takes into consideration the to be rendered by a vassal to his superior. ## EGYPTIAN OPENINGS FOR BRITISH GROWER

LONDON-E. H. Mulock, vice-consul in Alexandria, says, referring to the trade and commerce of the consular district during 1910: "British fruit and vegetable growers might find it worth their while to follow the example set by Italian, Austro-Hungarian and German enterprise in cultivating fruit and vegetables in Egypt, both to supply local demands and for export to Europe.

"With the exception of onions and tomatoes, all vegetables command a higher price here than in the United Kingdom, and are earlier than those grown in Europe. Though bananas have to be imported in large quantities from Spain, the small amount grown in and ound Alexandria finds a ready market in Constantinople and Odessa, where they are preferred to Canary island prod-There is also a good deal of demand for good, sound vegetable, fruit and flower seeds."

Another opening for British enterprise s possibly to be found in dairy farming in Egypt, it is said.

Bringing Peace Among the Filipinos

OF exceeding interest is an article in the National Geographic Magazine describing various trips among the Filipinos of northern Luzon on errands of pacification made by Lieutenant-Governor Hale and Dean C. Worcester, secretary of the interior of the Philippine islands and writer of the article.

The first illustration shows an Igorot of the wilds gathering lilies. Here is the dense jungle, the savage figure, and the massed whiteness of the splendid lilies, screening the man's body as he looks upward with a smile as if beholding a vision of new hope. The other illustrations show the natives at play, both at American games and in their own dances.

The story is told of how delegates of two tribes that had always been at war with each other met at a gathering in honor of the white visitors. One of tribes appeared fully armed but was easily made to feel ashamed of having intered so among a company of unarmed men. These two groups were persuaded to dance before each other and finally after The contests were over the chief of one tribe with a few followers approached the other chief and there was friendly talk, until these warriors, who bad never seen each other before except over the tops of their shields in battle. found out that it was possible to feel in accord with each other. Soon Lieu tenant-Governor Hale joined the group and then and there concluded a peace between these traditional enemies

OLD TOWERS CURIOUS IN HISTORY

T IS curious to trace the decisive effect that discovery and invention have always exercised upon architecture, for the builder almost invariably takes his cue from the progress of the age in which he builds.

A remarkable instance of this, the most clearly defined one of all perhaps, is to be seen in the effect that military inventions-the development of modern weapons and even strategy-has had upon all buildings of a defensive character. It is easy to follow the substitution of solid stone-built walls for the wooden stockades of early times, to see how the huge castles of the medieval ages became gradually more and more obsolete with the introduction of gunpowder and firearms, until finally very watch towers of a coast line fell almost entirely into disuse.

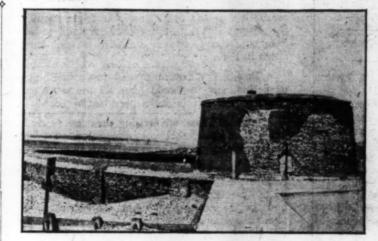

Walking along the coast of Sussex or Kent one constantly meets with these curious round-shaped towers, built of stone of no great circumference or height, and often surrounded by a deep and wide cut moat. Windows in their walls are few and far between, their with only some few miles of territory, inally placed there by the Genoese. So along the beach and sea wall or situated into the hands of the Genoese, who the southern shore of England. along the beach and sea wall or situated at intervals on the short turf that covers the summit of the chalk cliffs, assuredly has some history, some meaning attached to it, and this appears to be the explanation.

Hidden Hand

On the beach at Branford lies a little spring. Twice during the 24 hours the tide from Long Island sound covers it, and, receding, it leaves it fresh and sweet, a delight to the thirsty.

A little spring In a silver ring Lay down by the dark blue sea; It dimpled and smiled, This woodland child, And gave of its treasure free.

But the rough old tide With arms spread wide Caught the spring in its strong embrace;

With swish and sway, It washed away All trace of its sparkling face.

Yet the little rill Is smiling still, And its breath comes fresh and pure; For a mighty Hand 'Neath the golden sand Is holding its heart secure.

This unseen Hand Grasps sea and land, is well as the tiniest thing. 'Twill hold it fast, While time shall last,

The helpless little spring. Should wild waves roll O'er thee, my soul! And dim the "truth divine," I will not fear,

For ever clear, Its light will marvelous shine. -Susan E. W. Jocelyn in Every Other Sunday.

Paderewski's Panegyric on Chopin

A T the Chopin centenary last year Paderewski delivered ar address which was spoken of as a rare panegyric upon the art. In Paderewski's opinion 'Music is the only art that actually lives." Of Chopin he said, among other things:

He was a Slav, yet how distant his grace and charm, his wealth of color, of lights and shades, the unfailing fitness of his tragic sense from the somber and monotonous, though clever, Russian muse, upon whose cheek no maile of humor or happiness seems ever to have played. What light, what valor, what energy were in him! He it was who first conferred nobility on the peasant, the exquisite nobility of beauty. Poet, magician, monarch of right genius, he equalized all ranks; not down on the plains, on the flats and levels of everyday life, but high up on the loftiest summits of human emotion.

London's Coat of Arms

The city motto, "Domine dirige nos," dates, it has been found, from 1633, in which year also was the first-known use of the dragons, according to a special report issued by the city corporation. The short Roman sword in the first quarter of the shield is the sword of St. Paul, patron saint of the city. shield (the proper color of its field being silver) is charged with the plain flat cross of St. George, and the color is red. This conjunction of the cross of St. George and the sword of St. Paul, it is conjectured, is intended to typify England and London, its capital .- St

Advertising a National Index

A social observer will judge a people by its methods of doing business as readily and as accurately as he will by its art, literature or domestic life. A statesman finds in the advertising pages of the journals of a rival nation's press his best contemporary index of that nation's economic and industrial status, its relative enterprise and resourcefulness and the way in which it is tending. For this reason it was that Gladstone always insisted on seeing the American editions of the leading American magazines. Their text interested him much, but their advertisements more, so he frankly said. From the text he often got interesting sidelights on new phases of problems of government, theology and literature about which men had been disputing for ages. But from the advertisements he got a record of the grapple of a self-reliant, resourceful, versatile people with problems of economics, industry, application of physical science to manufacturing and of efficient modes of marketing goods that he could not get from the text of the magazines or from state papers by official investigators.

Gladstone, the statesman, read American advertisements for the same authoritative light on contemporary economic evolution that Rhodes, the American historian, sought on national political evolution when he sent his corps of investigators to the files of the American press. And it is in this larger light that both advertising agents and "experts" and the public can look upon advertising, if

If rightly appraised, advertising is something more than "brokerage in publicity," the placing of new business, the bringing of maker and user, producer and consumer, together. Estimated as Gladstone valued it, advertising becomes the unconscious and therefore more veracious chronicle of the life of the time, registering in an attractive way the many sided activities of a people and forming a record as useful to the contemporary responsible statesman as it will be later to the social historian. Just as knowledge that historians now rate higher than formerly the newspaper as a source of information and opinion gives a higher tone to journalism, so the broad view of advertising, kept in mind by those whose business it is to frame and to place advertisements, naturally must have an uplifting and wholesome effect.

IF RECIPROCITY with Canada foreshadows world peace, as Premier Laurier predicts, the people of the Dominion may have good reason for supporting the commercial arrangement between the two nations.

The "valor of discretion" is different from the "valor of ignorance," the "valor of contempt" and the "valor of defiance." It is less spectacular than the last but often quite as wise. There is something fascinating about the obstinacy with which a defeated man refuses to acknowledge defeat, but it usually results in needless destruction of what otherwise might have been saved. The coon that came down when it saw Davy Crockett walking through the forests was wise. These counsels of legitimate prudence are brought to mind by the confessions of guilt recently made by the wire trust, and the voluntary dissolution of the electrical trust in the hope to escape prosecution by the federal government. Now that the supreme court has put "teeth" in the Sherman law, some organizations that have been restraining trade seem to have a strong disinclination to be drawn within feeding range. Roarings and bellowings have not frightened them; but for biting, crunching law enforcement they have no liking. If the law really is to be enforced, then they will obey it. The the highest form of obedience to law, but it is better than disobedience. Attorney-General Wickersham has a dual task just ahead of him: To oppose with vigor the defiantly lawless and to negotiate sagaciously with the penitent and more lawfully inclined. Penitence and reform might be merely assumed, in which case all the heavier the ultimate penalty. But if the penitents ask for a hearing, that is their due, along with a chance to reform.

SMALLER cities having shown that postal banks suit the communities, the fact that ten cities of the first class are now to be equipped similarly by the postoffice department points to a further appreciation of the facilities.

Inquiry Into Municipal Indebtedness

THE investigation into municipal financial affairs with which the Massachusetts Legislature in its closing hours charged the bureau of statistics should result in the gathering of data of great value to the state authorities and to all those who are concerned in the fiduciary standing of the local governments. The Lawrence case has brought before the public more impressively than usual the necessity for such an investigation as that ordered. There are 354 cities and towns in the commonwealth empowered to contract debts. It is simply in line with common prudence that the state take an accounting of their financial status periodically.

The resolve passed by the Legislature makes a comprehensive inquiry possible. It will allow investigation into the manner in which taxes are levied, rebated and collected, the nature and care of special trust funds. In a word, all the facts the state, the tax-payers, the lenders of money or anybody else ought to know in relation to the financial condition of the towns and cities are to be collected and compiled for ready reference by the bureau. Director Gettemy gives assurance that the inquiry will be thorough.

Massachusetts would seem to be setting a good example in this particular. Nearly all of the nearby states have their statistical bureaus, and it is not difficult for one to find in a general way how the credit of any important municipality stands. But what seems to be proposed in Massachusetts is an investigation that will reveal the entire monetary operations of the smaller as well as the secondary municipalities, thereby furnishing data that may be used either to give further stimulus to the public affairs of the well-managed community or to place a check, and in time, upon that community which is running loosely toward bankruptcy. Very often timely action will save a town or city from extravagance and corruption in the first place and from reaction and depression in the second place. Moreover, additional value will attach to the Massachusetts municipal statistics because they are to be brought down to date.

THERE is a continued call for something different in the line of fiction, and it should have all the more serious attention, considering that this is not a presidential year.

IF THE Texas advertising men are fairly representative of the Lone Star state, that commonwealth must have its full measure of enthusiasm when the experts are at home.

THE western states have contributed largely toward the readjustment of the popular idea of the farmer. A great deal has been said, and quite interestingly and instructively, about the Kansas and Nebraska farmer, his fine residence and barns, his up-to-date equipment, his standing as an investor, his automobile, the culture of his family and his neighborhood, but it has so happened that, in the desire to show how marvelously the pioneers of a few years ago have advanced in prosperity, the progress of the farmers of some of the older middle western states has been overlooked. If things have changed in Kansas and Nebraska during the last fifteen years, the change in Ohio and Indiana during the last forty years has been fully as striking.

In an article appearing in the current issue of Dry Goods, P. Willis touches on the value of the farmers' trade of Indiana in these days. It is unnecessary to say that, when the farmers' trade is now mentioned, the country trade that used to come to town in two-horse wagons on market days is not meant. Indianapolis is the metropolitan trading and distributing center for one of the finest agricultural states in the Union, but visitors to that city in our times will not find teams of farm wagons hitched to the city hall, court house or capitol fence, nor will he find the farmer, trousers legs in boots, trying to trade butter and eggs for groceries and dry goods in the general store. The Indiana farmer and his wife ceased to come to town in a wagon several years ago. They now come in by train or trolley or in their own automobile. The farmer's trade-his patronage-is sought not merely by the small retailer but by merchants and, frequently, by brokers. Says Mr. Willis: "The farmer finds the price of land so high he scarcely can buy it and expect a satisfactory return on his money. It is almost impossible for him to buy stock in his prosperous local bank. So he turns his attention to securities and real estate investments offered in the big city.'

The farmers' trade affects the general business of Indianapolis. Few, if any, cities are better served by interurban lines of electric railway than the Indiana metropolis. The result is that the buyer in bulk, as well as the ordinary customer, is brought into close and constant contact with the city merchant. The whole aspect of the farm life has changed in recent years. The farmer is no longer isolated. He is in touch with the activities of life. The rural mail delivery brings him letters and newspapers; he uses the telephone freely; it is no trouble to go to town. The farmer of today, in Indiana and in many other parts of the country, is nearer to the business and commercial life of the city than the suburban resident was a few years ago.

IT WOULD have been strange if the proverbial German hospitality had not greeted the American business men who are touring the continent in search of information.

THE motto of the modern ad man, "Do It Now and Keep Everlastingly at It," might serve a good purpose if adopted generally.

Growth of Prussian Cities

CITYWARD trend of population in Prussia, speaking generally, is hardly less pronounced than it is in England and the United States, and this despite the fact that Berlin, within the walls, has not grown as rapidly as some other of the great cities of the world in the last five years. Berlin's greatest growth has been suburban. Its surrounding cities—Charlottenburg, Rixdorf, Schoeneberg and Deutsch-Wilmersdorf—all show large gains in the last five or ten years. The gain of the last-named city runs up to 72 per cent. Each of these cities has now a population exceeding 100,000, and another, Lichtenberg, will soon be able to claim the same figure.

Twenty-five cities in Prussia had a population exceeding 100,-000 in 1900; in 1910 the number had grown to thirty-two. In 1905 there were fifty-seven cities having a population of 50,000 and over; the number in five years increased to sixty-one with a combined population of 10,880,000 as against 8,300,000, according to the earlier count. It is a noticeable fact that in the five years previous to the last census every city of the 50,000 class had increased in population, although it is true that the increase was less rapid, than during the preceding five-year period.

In Prussia as elsewhere the industrial cities are pulling hard against the agricultural districts. Prussia and Germany in general are often held up in Great Britain as illustrations of the fact that it is possible for manufacturing growth and agricultural growth to go hand in hand. It is possible, but, as has been shown by the experience of this country, and as the Prussian census returns indicate, it is difficult. Steady work, better wages, social opportunities, more comfortable if more crowded housing are some of the allurements of the industrial city; the advantages of country life that more than offset them are too often lost sight of.

AFTERNOON coats with buttons down the back will be fashionable next fall. It is unnecessary to say that the coats are to be for the ladies. After their long and trying experience with buttons down the back in which they have only an indirect interest, men could never be induced to adopt them.

When Admiral Togo visits the Charlestown navy yard the modern men-of-war lying almost alongside the old Constitution will no doubt convey their own lesson to the Japanese naval expert.

One way to prevent long legislative sessions would be to charge the members a per diem after a certain date, and make the date early.

GATHERING of the advertising men in Faneuil hall sounded another note in the "get together" fanfare

The news that Lord Kitchener of Khartoum will proceed in September next to take up the office of consul-general and British agent in Egypt has been received with extraordinary satisfaction by the European colony there, and with tempered composure by the native. No greater compliment, perhaps, could have been paid to the new pro-consul than that native opinion should be content to wait upon the event. In England there to wait upon the event. In England there is undoubtedly considerable pleasure in the fact that the government has at last found a means of employing the youngest field marshal, even the advanced Radicals being content to adopt the famous saying of the prime minister and wait and see.

"K. of K."

The readiness of the representatives of so many interests to at least give Lord Kitchener the opportunity of developing his policy is a proof of the extraordinary manner in which the field marshal has impressed men with his independence of judgment and action. A soldier by profession, it is less as a fighter than a pro-consul that his reputation has been made. One of the most pathetic incidents of the story of Carlyle's life was the craving of the man who had written of men of action to be a man of action himself. In the cramped seclusion of the little house in Cheyne row he put aside with disgust offers of titles and ribbons, and dreamed of what he might have accomplished as the ruler of the teeming millions of India or the Dutch farmers of the veldt. What Carlyle would have done in such circumstances is only a degree more problematical than what Lord Kitchener will do. The one thing which is humanly certain is that so long as he holds the reins of power he will do what seems good to him, though all the officials of Whitehall and Cairo should rise in protest.

Lord Kitchener has the reputation of being a hard man, a tremendous worker who, in the cause of his country, never considers the feelings or labors of those who serve under him. Yet, in every difficult position in which he has ever been found, he has acted with a tactful consideration not unworthy of the great Duke of Marlborough, of whom it was said that those who left him the most displeased as to their business left him the most delighted with his reception of them. His chivalrous conduct to Major Marchand was largely instrumental in taking the sting out of the Fashoda incident. In South Africa, though while the war lasted, he pursued the Boer commandos relentlessly, his tactful handling of the final negotiations made possible the peace of Vereeniging. Today, in South Africa not less than in North Africa, he is remembered with respect and admiration. Essentially an organizer, he conquered the Soudan with the railway, and today he returns to take up and complete the labors he laid down when he resigned the sirdarship.

Enter Admiral Togo On BOARD an English steamer, in the company of hundreds of Americans returning from the coronation, Japan's naval hero, Admiral Togo, is traveling toward the United States, where in a few days he will be received as the guest of the government. Including Prince Henry of Prussia, there have been a number of foreigners thus honored by the American people through the Washington authorities. But in the case of Admiral Togo several circumstances combine in making his visit to America exceptionally significant. Only yesterday, as it were, the two great powers bordering on the Pacific ocean were said to pursue conflicting policies. Today the Japanese government has not only dispelled the cloud that tended to obscure the diplomatic horizon, but, as a token of its good will toward the United States, it sends its greatest naval representative here to cement a friendship of many years' standing.

Preliminary to his arrival, his mingling on shipboard with citizens of the United States should aid in making the Japanese sailor-statesman entirely at home when the representative of President Taft meets him at New York and bids him welcome in the name of the nation. Entertainments to follow will perhaps be of the routine order, but to Admiral Togo throwing open the navy yards for his inspection will unquestionably seem the most distinguished honor that could be paid him. A few months ago an order of Secretary Meyer prohibited the inspection of any American navy yard by foreigners bent upon such a mission. When the secretary of the navy was apprised of Admiral Togo's visit, he issued an order to make an exception in the case of this Japanese visitor.

Before leaving Liverpool Admiral Togo expressed himself emphatically in relation to the friendship existing between his government and the American government. His visit may very well indicate that not only is there a satisfactory understanding between Tokio and Washington, but that the people of the two nations desire nothing more than continued peace.

REPORTS from Pittsburg relative to tests recently made there under the supervision of federal officials and civic league representatives indicate that, in furnaces of the type used ordinarily where power is generated, relatively perfect combustion can be had without use of mechanical devices for smoke consumption, if only care is taken to provide sufficient oxygen. In short, careful stoking, by hand or automatically, if sup-

Smokeless Power Plants plemented by provision for a natural supply of the element requisite to produce a good fire, makes unnecessary much of that additional expenditure for equipment, the dread of which undoubtedly acts as a bogey forcing some owners of factories to obstructive action.

Granting that the solution of the problem is as easy and inexpensive as these Pittsburg experiments would seem to show it to be, the case of protestants against filthy conditions in most American urban communities is strengthened. If all that is necessary is an adequate supply of oxygen and a right method of feeding fuel to the fire, then many a manufacturer, now seemingly obstinate in resistance, can be brought to terms, for he is standing out solely on the ground of anticipated expense in equipping his plant with "smoke consumers."

The claim in behalf of sensible stoking and normal conditions of combustion has been urged long. The advantage of the Pittsburg experiment is in its probable educational effect locally and in the personnel of the judges of the experiment.

ALL the indications point to the fact that silver will soon cease to be worth its weight in potatoes.
